

AT THE FIGHTING FRONT IN FRANCE AND ON THE SEA

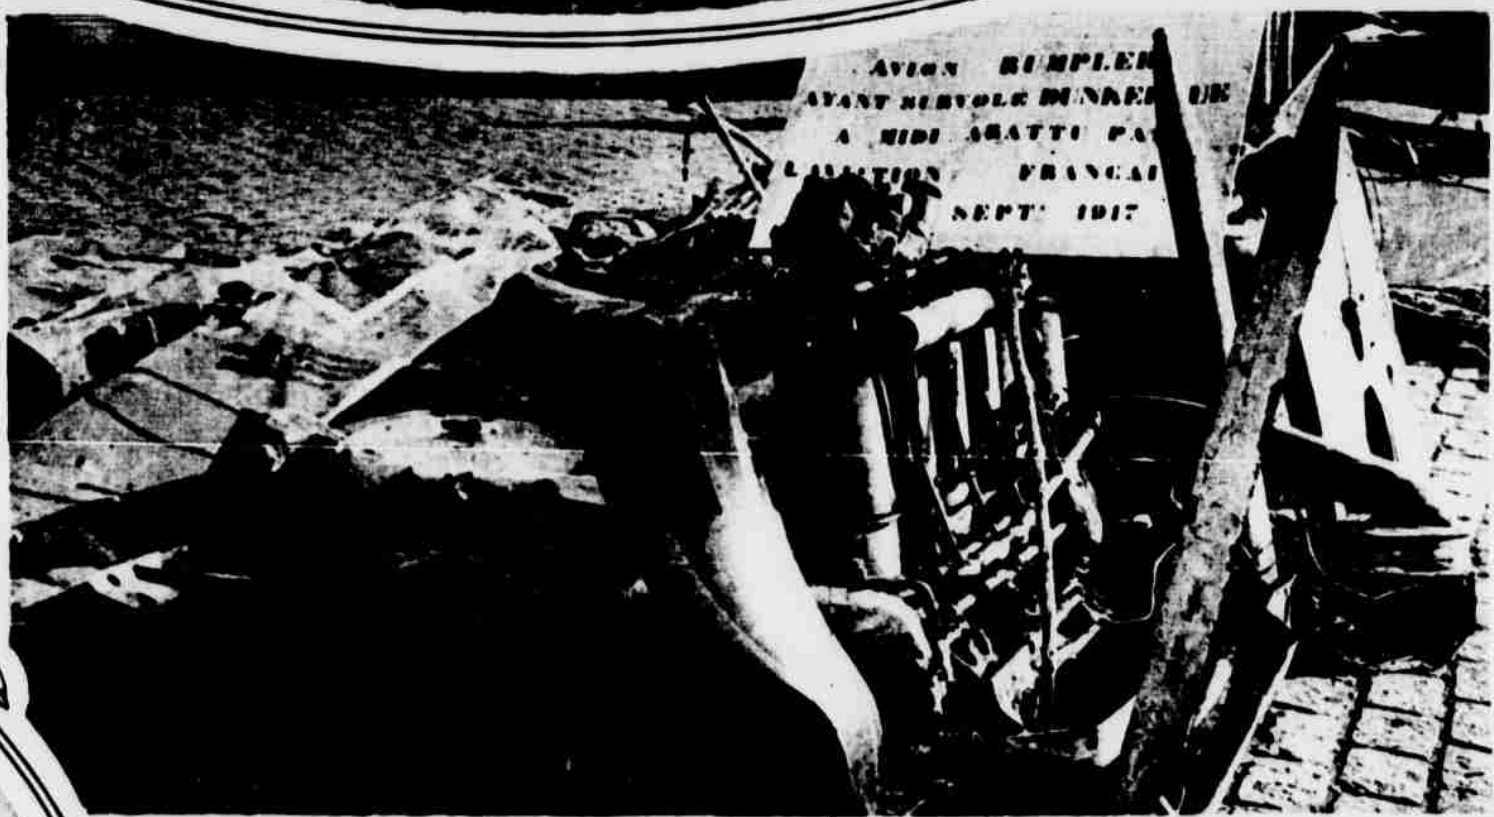

It has been said that a Frenchman never steps on a volcano without wanting to dance. This spirit is shown in the vivacious attitude of the soldiers of the Army of the Aisne, passing in review before their commander shortly after a desperate battle. Martial music puts new life into them.

Lieut.-Commander David Worth Bagley, who commanded the Jacob Jones. He is a brother of Ensign Worth Bagley, the first naval officer killed in the Spanish war and a brother-in-law of Secretary Daniels.

Above—This is the United States destroyer Jacob Jones the first American war vessel to be sunk by a submarine. She was one of the latest types and had done excellent work with Admiral Sims' U-boat hunters. She had a speed of more than thirty knots an hour.

On Oct. 1 German aviators attempted to raid the city of Dunkirk in France. They succeeded in killing a few civilians but paid dear for it, as this wreck of a Boche plane in the public square graphically shows.

Here is a German "pillbox" destroyed by the French on the Somme. This mass of concrete, wire and steel was devised to counteract the effectiveness of the tank, which made ordinary advanced positions impossible to hold.

There is one sight always pleasant to eyes in the allied countries, and this is an example of it. These Germans were captured by the French in their offensive during the latter part of October. Many of them are still in their teens.
